Plaintiff is advised that only persons acting under color of state law are proper defendants under section 1983. The Commonwealth of Virginia is immune under the Eleventh Amendment.

Private parties such as attorneys and other inmates may not be sued under section 1983. In addition, liability under section 1983 requires personal action by the defendant that caused you harm. Normally, the Director of the Department of Corrections, wardens and sheriffs are not liable under section 1983 just because they supervise persons who may have violated your rights. These persons are liable only if they were personally involved in the alleged deprivation. In addition, prisons, jails, and departments within an institution are not persons under section 1983.
